DemocratandChronicle.

2 SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 2009

Keeping it loc

Follow The 3/50 Project and you'll support small businesses when you shop.

JINELLE SHENGULETTE CONTRIBUTING WRITER

It's a simple little flyer that's out to save the world.

Don Stevens and Scott Mackey, owners of Wickedly Sent Soap & Candle Company in Canandaigua, are among the dozen or so business owners locally — and thousands nationally — who are handing out write-ups on The 3/50 Project, a national effort to encourage people to shop locally.

Many people like the idea of supporting small local businesses, but they don't always show it with their actions.

don't +hinle i

48 cents returned to the community.

The Project has quickly caught on in a few short months, with more than 9,700 registered supporters and 143,000 visitors to the site.

The owners of Wickedly Sent, which specializes in handmade bath and body products, happened upon the site while brainstorming how to get locals into their shop. Stevens and Mackey saw it as "a non-confrontational way to talk to customers about how they spend their money," Mackey says. They print out the flyers from the Web site to hand out to customers and to thank them for shopping locally.

Sales associate Christina Sorrentino of East Irondequoit, right, assists Kel picking out a bracelet at Craft Company No. 6 in Rochester.

WITH CHOIL GOULOHOI

"I don't think it's a conscious choice," says Cinda Baxter, the retail consultant who founded The 3/50 Project in March. But, she explains, "we're so caught up in our high speed lives and we're flying along so fast." When we're going at warp speed, we tend to overlook smaller stores.

Baxter

So Baxter launched her Web site, The350Pro-ject.net, asking consumers to consider three independently owned businesses they would be sad to see disapand pear, then commit to spending $50 monthly between the three.

Out of every dollar spent in an independent small business, Baxter explains, 68 cents returns to the community through taxes, business related purchases, payroll and more. The same dollar spent in a chain store will see just and to thank them for shopping locally.

Beth Weeden, a regular at the shop, has become a strong supporter of the project—with one small complication. "My husband and I were brainstorming together and I said 'What three stores do you think we should pick?' And we came up with nine!" Weeden says. "So for us, it was hard to narrow it down to three."

Weeden says she has been an advocate of shopping locally for years. One of her favorite reasons is the customer service. "Of

"I feel great because I know that the money in I'm spending is going back into my community." Beth Weeden course we got to know the owners," she says. "There's something about going in and they know what vou like. It's like going in see friends and I feel great because I know that the money I'm spending is going back into my community."

Lynn Allinger, owner of Craft Company No. 6 in the Neighborhood of the Arts in Rochester, also registered her business with 3/50. And she backs

LOCAL, PAGE 41

Born

REEN

Local FROM PAGE 2

it up by not only shopping locally as much as possible but also making it a point to shop in her own neighborhood.

"I want our neighborhood to continue to grow and be successful," Allinger says. "So we try as much as possible to eat in restaurants in our area and spend as much of our dollars as we can on services in our neighborhood."

Other Rochester businesses to sign up with The 3/50 Project include Blanchard Florist in Greece, Dan's Crafts & Things (a hobby shop in Rochester) and Windsor Cottage (a furniture and home décor consignment shop in Winton Place in Brighton). Signing up simply registers their support; there's no obligation or cost, but businesses can download the flyer that explains the concept of choosing local stores and committing to patronizing them.

Groups like the Business Association of the South Wedge Area (BAS-WA) have a similar goal. BASWA promotes inde- site. pendent business in the Rochester neighborhood and encourages them to

"The diversity of our South Wedge small businesses is critical to the character of our neighborhood."

Christina Jones

support each other. benches, South Wedge businesses planters, totem bicycle can register at www.bas- racks and many of the counted membership to out the neighborhood. Visit Rochester, discounted advertising in streetscape much more area publications and walkable than it was in banners.

"We tried to make our deals on merchandise the past, to get our resithrough our commercial Historic Houseparts in the South Wedge. "The diversity of our South is critical to the character of our neighborhood."

also was behind Maura local independent busi-Harrison's decision to sign up with The 3/50 wa.org and receive dis- garden spaces through- Project. Harrison, owner of Sassafras, a flower and gift boutique on East Avenue, says, "I decided to participate because I was visiting people out available on the Web dents out and walking of town and suddenly realized that every town BASWA has recently district," says Christina you go to in the U.S. is re-invested membership Jones, president of BAS- starting to look the fees in the form of street WA and co-owner of same. I think that the products, go to page 151.

Photo by Matt Wittmeyer

U.S. is starting to lose its smaller businesses that make it so unique."

That being said, The Wedge small businesses 3/50 Project is not about abandoning the chain stores. Instead, it's about moderation and know-Preserving character ing what is available in nesses versus the chains.

> "I really don't see it as the big box stores against the small businesses," Harrison says. "It's about putting the best product forward for the customer."

Local Gifts

To find made-in-Rochester